Chapter 1 by Florenceia

My mom always said love has no boundaries and if you love someone it doesn't matter what gets in your way, you will always love them. I never truly believed her. Back then I was so naive, until I met Carter Jaime Anisten. I had known Carter was gender fluid, the only gender fluid person in my building, but I had never believed I would fall head over heels with her. I guess that makes me pansexual, huh. Mom was right, as she usually is. Love has no boundaries and it took me a good twenty years of life to realize that.

Chapter 2 by SaintSayaka

The first day of college is nerve wracking for anyone, but being dragonkin can make it infinitely harder. Our anxiety runs as hot as any of our other emotions, if the way the media presents us is anything to go by. As I walked down what would soon be a familiar path from my car to my dorm, a kitsune locked eyes with me, and quickly looked away. I sighed. I had hoped that this treatment would stop upon my enrollment to somewhere decidedly liberal. I suppose bigots exist anywhere - even in New York. Still, I wasn't going to let a few bad looks ruin my day. I was moving in somewhere other than my mother's den! Of course I would miss her, but being free was something that I had been waiting for. Even if freedom was found in a public school, shared by ten thousand other students.
